

THE WILLIAM D. RUCKELSHAUS CENTER

UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON

Internship Program

The Ruckelshaus Center is a joint effort of the University of Washington and Washington State University and is dedicated to assisting public, private, tribal, non-profit and other community leaders in their efforts to build consensus and collaboratively resolve conflicts around difficult public policy issues. The Ruckelshaus Center Internship Program is designed to provide meaningful hands-on experience for graduate students and recent graduates interested in the field of collaborative public policy. Interns are exposed to current public policy issues in the State of WA and Pacific Northwest and gain insight into the practice of Alternative Dispute Resolution and Collaborative Governance. The Center's Internship Program also provides opportunities to work side by side with professionals and mentors on real collaborative public policy projects and to cultivate collaborative skill sets needed to be successful in the field.

What Do Interns Do?

Internship assignments vary but all interns are assigned a Center faculty or staff mentor and provide project support, conduct research, participate in training development activities, provide support for Center events, and gain valuable office experience.

Assignments may also include:

- Working with Center faculty, staff and affiliated practitioners to conduct collaborative public policy assessments and to plan, design, and facilitate public policy meetings.
- Researching and writing project reports, some informal for internal use, and some that will go to large groups of community leaders and policy makers.
- Preparing background or briefing materials for the Center's Advisory Board and helping to track lessons learned from Center projects.
- Supporting the Center's Collaborative Capacity Building Program.
- Helping write grants and proposals for new projects.
- Attending and presenting at various conferences.
